Nutrition for Cats

In nature, whether it be a cougar, a tiger or a lion cub, a big cat needs meat to survive. Your pet cat has the same need for the protein in meat to be strong and healthy.

Hills Science Diet cat foods are made with chicken as the number one ingredient, which provides a taste cats will love, not to mention unsurpassed digestibility for less litter box waste and odour.

Nutrition Tips

There are a lot of different diets out there. Here is a quick guide to help select the best one for your cat.

Look for quality - Check out the ingredients on the back of the packaging to find out what's really in the food.

Look for value - You will find that with high quality dry food like Hills Science Diet you don't need to feed as much and the bag will last a long time (up to a few months). Be sure to compare on a cost per meal basis.

(our friendly staff can help you with this)

Stick with one food - A complete and balanced dry food is just that, other than water your cat needs nothing else. Home cooked meals are time consuming and may not have the required nutrient your cat needs. Cats can also become fussy eaters if their diet is often changed.

Look for a diet that caters to your cats individual needs - feeding requirements vary deepening on the age, breed and activity level of your pet.

Where to buy - Murray Bridge Veterinary Clinic can provide expert, independent advice on feeding based on your cat's age, activity level and any noticeable sensitivities.
